The mission of the Institute of Oceanology is to conduct marine environmenal research in order to expand knowledge of the processes and phenomena taking place there. Studies, which are carried out on the Baltic Sea and European Arcitc Seas, focus these days on the following four strategic fields: I. The role of the oceans in climate change and its effects on European seas, II. The natural and anthropogenic variability of the Baltic Sea environment, III. Contemporary changes in the coastal ecosystems of shelf seas, IV. Genetic and physiological mechanisms of the functioning of marine organisms, the basics of marine biotechnology.
